July 23, 2020

1 Assignment 1: Logistic Regression

Welcome to week one of this specialization. You will learn about logistic regression. Concretely, you will be implementing logistic regression for sentiment analysis on tweets. Given a tweet, you will decide if it has a positive sentiment or a negative one. Specifically you will:

- Learn how to extract features for logistic regression given some text
- Implement logistic regression from scratch
- Apply logistic regression on a natural language processing task
- Test using your logistic regression
- Perform error analysis

We will be using a data set of tweets. Hopefully you will get more than 99% accuracy. Run the cell below to load in the packages.

1.1 Import functions and data

In [1]: # run this cell to import nltk import nltk
from os import getcwd

In [2]: nltk.download('twitter_samples')
nltk.download('stopwords')
```

```
[nltk_data] Downloading package twitter_samples to [nltk_data] /home/jovyan/nltk_data...
[nltk_data] Unzipping corpora/twitter_samples.zip.
[nltk_data] Downloading package stopwords to /home/jovyan/nltk_data...
[nltk_data] Unzipping corpora/stopwords.zip.

Out[2]: True

1.1.1 Imported functions

Download the data needed for this assignment. Check out the documentation for the twitter\_samples dataset.

- `twitter_samples`: if you're running this notebook on your local computer, you will need to download it using:

nlTK.download('twitter_samples')
```

- `stopwords`: if you're running this notebook on your local computer, you will need to download it using:

```
nlTK.download('stopwords')

Import some helper functions that we provided in the `utils.py` file:

- `process_tweet()`: cleans the text, tokenizes it into separate words, removes stopwords, and converts words to stems.
- `build_freqs()`: this counts how often a word in the 'corpus' (the entire set of tweets) was associated with a positive label '1' or a negative label '0', then builds the `freqs` dictionary, where each key is a (word,label) tuple, and the value is the count of its frequency within the corpus of tweets.

In [3]: from utils import process_tweet, build_freqs
```

In [4]: # add folder, tmp2, from our local workspace containing pre-downloaded corpora files to # this enables importing of these files without downloading it again when we refresh o
```

```
filePath = f"{getcwd()}/../tmp2/"
nlTK.data.path.append(filePath)
```

In [5]: import numpy as np import pandas as pd from nlTK.corpus import twitter_samples from utils import process_tweet, build_freqs

1.1.2 Prepare the data

- The `twitter_samples` contains subsets of 5,000 positive tweets, 5,000 negative tweets, and the full set of 10,000 tweets.
  - If you used all three datasets, we would introduce duplicates of the positive tweets and negative tweets.
  - You will select just the five thousand positive tweets and five thousand negative tweets.

In [6]: # select the set of positive and negative tweets all_positive_tweets = twitter_samples.strings('positive_tweets.json') all_negative_tweets = twitter_samples.strings('negative_tweets.json')
```

- Train test split: 20% will be in the test set, and 80% in the training set.

In [7]: # split the data into two pieces, one for training and one for testing (validation set) test_pos = all_positive_tweets[4000:]
train_pos = all_positive_tweets[:4000] test_neg = all_negative_tweets[4000:]
train_neg = all_negative_tweets[:4000]
```

```
train_x = train_pos + train_neg test_x = test_pos + test_neg
```

- Create the numpy array of positive labels and negative labels.

In [8]: # combine positive and negative labels train_y = np.append(np.ones((len(train_pos), 1)), np.zeros((len(train_neg), 1)), axis=0) test_y = np.append(np.ones((len(test_pos), 1)), np.zeros((len(test_neg), 1)), axis=0)

```
In [9]: # Print the shape train and test sets print("train_y.shape = " + str(train_y.shape))
print("test_y.shape = " + str(test_y.shape))
```

```
train_y.shape = (8000, 1)
test_y.shape = (2000, 1)
```

- Create the frequency dictionary using the imported build_freqs() function.
  - We highly recommend that you open utils.py and read the build_freqs() function to understand what it is doing.
  - To view the file directory, go to the menu and click File->Open.

for y,tweet in zip(ys, tweets):
    for word in process_tweet(tweet):
        pair = (word, y)
        if pair in freqs:
            freqs[pair] += 1
        else:
```

- Notice how the outer for loop goes through each tweet, and the inner for loop steps through each word in a tweet.
- The freqs dictionary is the frequency dictionary that's being built.
- The key is the tuple (word, label), such as ("happy",1) or ("happy",0). The value stored for each key is the count of how many times the word "happy" was associated with a positive label, or how many times "happy" was associated with a negative label.

In [10]: # create frequency dictionary freqs = build_freqs(train_x, train_y)

check the output
print("type(freqs) = " + str(type(freqs)))
print("len(freqs) = " + str(len(freqs.keys())))
```

```
type(freqs) = <class 'dict'>
len(freqs) = 11346
```

Expected output

type(freqs) = <class 'dict'>
len(freqs) = 11346

1.1.3 Process tweet

The given function `process_tweet()` tokenizes the tweet into individual words, removes stop words and applies stemming.

In [11]: # test the function below print('This is an example of a positive tweet: \n', train_x[0]) print('\nThis is an example of the processed version of the tweet: \n', process_tweet(train_x[0]))
```

This is an example of a positive tweet:

```
#FollowFriday @France_Inte @PKuchly57 @Milipol_Paris for being top engaged members in my community
```

This is an example of the processed version of the tweet:

```
['followfriday', 'top', 'engag', 'member', 'commun', 'week', ':)']
```

Expected output

This is an example of a positive tweet:

```
#FollowFriday @France_Inte @PKuchly57 @Milipol_Paris for being top engaged members in my community
```

This is an example of the processes version:

```
['followfriday', 'top', 'engag', 'member', 'commun', 'week', ':)']
```

2 Part 1: Logistic regression

2.0.1 Part 1.1: Sigmoid

You will learn to use logistic regression for text classification. * The sigmoid function is defined as:

$$h(z) = \frac{1}{1 + \exp^{-z}} \quad (1)$$

It maps the input 'z' to a value that ranges between 0 and 1, and so it can be treated as a probability.

Instructions: Implement the sigmoid function

- You will want this function to work if  $z$  is a scalar as well as if it is an array.

Hints

numpy.exp

```
In [12]: # UNQ_C1 (UNIQUE CELL IDENTIFIER, DO NOT EDIT)
from numpy import array, exp
def sigmoid(z):
    '''
    Input:
        z: is the input (can be a scalar or an array) Output:
        h: the sigmoid of z
    '''

    ### START CODE HERE (REPLACE INSTANCES OF 'None' with your code) ###
    # calculate the sigmoid of z
    #h = None
    h = 1 / (1+ exp(-z))
    ### END CODE HERE ###

    return h

In [13]: # Testing your function
if (sigmoid(0) == 0.5):
    print('SUCCESS!')
else:
    print('Oops!')

if (sigmoid(4.92) == 0.9927537604041685):
    print('CORRECT!')
else:
    print('Oops again!')
```

SUCCESS!

CORRECT!

2.0.2 Logistic regression: regression and a sigmoid

Logistic regression takes a regular linear regression, and applies a sigmoid to the output of the linear regression.

Regression:

$$z = \theta_0 x_0 + \theta_1 x_1 + \theta_2 x_2 + \dots \theta_N x_N$$

Note that the  $\theta$  values are “weights”. If you took the Deep Learning Specialization, we referred to the weights with the  $w$  vector. In this course, we’re using a different variable  $\theta$  to refer to the weights.

Logistic regression

$$h(z) = \frac{1}{1 + \exp^{-z}}$$

$$z = \theta_0 x_0 + \theta_1 x_1 + \theta_2 x_2 + \dots \theta_N x_N$$

We will refer to 'z' as the 'logits'.

2.0.3 Part 1.2 Cost function and Gradient

The cost function used for logistic regression is the average of the log loss across all training examples:

$$J(\theta) = -\frac{1}{m} \sum_{i=1}^m y^{(i)} \log(h(z(\theta)^{(i)})) + (1 - y^{(i)}) \log(1 - h(z(\theta)^{(i)})) \quad (5)$$

\*  $m$  is the number of training examples \*  $y^{(i)}$  is the actual label of the  $i$ -th training example. \*  $h(z(\theta)^{(i)})$  is the model's prediction for the  $i$ -th training example.

The loss function for a single training example is $$Loss = -1 \times (y^{(i)} \log(h(z(\theta)^{(i)})) + (1 - y^{(i)}) \log(1 - h(z(\theta)^{(i)})))$$

- All the  $h$  values are between 0 and 1, so the logs will be negative. That is the reason for the factor of -1 applied to the sum of the two loss terms.
- Note that when the model predicts 1 ( $h(z(\theta)) = 1$ ) and the label  $y$  is also 1, the loss for that training example is 0.
- Similarly, when the model predicts 0 ( $h(z(\theta)) = 0$ ) and the actual label is also 0, the loss for that training example is 0.
- However, when the model prediction is close to 1 ( $h(z(\theta)) = 0.9999$ ) and the label is 0, the second term of the log loss becomes a large negative number, which is then multiplied by the overall factor of -1 to convert it to a positive loss value.  $-1 \times (1 - 0) \times \log(1 - 0.9999) \approx 9.2$
The closer the model prediction gets to 1, the larger the loss.

In [14]: # verify that when the model predicts close to 1, but the actual label is 0, the loss
-1 * (1 - 0) * np.log(1 - 0.9999) # loss is about 9.2
```

```
Out[14]: 9.210340371976294
```

- Likewise, if the model predicts close to 0 ( $h(z) = 0.0001$ ) but the actual label is 1, the first term in the loss function becomes a large number:  $-1 \times \log(0.0001) \approx 9.2$ . The closer the prediction is to zero, the larger the loss.

In [15]: # verify that when the model predicts close to 0 but the actual label is 1, the loss
-1 * np.log(0.0001) # loss is about 9.2
```

```
Out[15]: 9.210340371976182

Update the weights To update your weight vector  $\theta$ , you will apply gradient descent to iteratively improve your model's predictions.

The gradient of the cost function  $J$  with respect to one of the weights  $\theta_j$  is:

$$\nabla_{\theta_j} J(\theta) = \frac{1}{m} \sum_{i=1}^m (h^{(i)} - y^{(i)}) x_j \quad (5)$$

\* 'i' is the index across all 'm' training examples. \* 'j' is the index of the weight  $\theta_j$ , so  $x_j$  is the feature associated with weight  $\theta_j$

- To update the weight  $\theta_j$ , we adjust it by subtracting a fraction of the gradient determined by  $\alpha$ :

$$\theta_j = \theta_j - \alpha \times \nabla_{\theta_j} J(\theta)$$

- The learning rate  $\alpha$  is a value that we choose to control how big a single update will be.

2.1 Instructions: Implement gradient descent function

- The number of iterations `num_iters` is the number of times that you'll use the entire training set.
- For each iteration, you'll calculate the cost function using all training examples (there are `m` training examples), and for all features.
- Instead of updating a single weight  $\theta_i$  at a time, we can update all the weights in the column vector:

$$\theta = \begin{pmatrix} \theta_0 \\ \theta_1 \\ \theta_2 \\ \vdots \\ \theta_n \end{pmatrix}$$

- $\theta$  has dimensions  $(n+1, 1)$ , where 'n' is the number of features, and there is one more element for the bias term  $\theta_0$  (note that the corresponding feature value  $x_0$  is 1).
- The 'logits', 'z', are calculated by multiplying the feature matrix 'x' with the weight vector 'theta'.  $z = x\theta$
  - x has dimensions  $(m, n+1)$
  - $\theta$ : has dimensions  $(n+1, 1)$
  - z: has dimensions  $(m, 1)$
- The prediction 'h', is calculated by applying the sigmoid to each element in 'z':  $h(z) = \text{sigmoid}(z)$ , and has dimensions  $(m, 1)$ .
- The cost function  $J$  is calculated by taking the dot product of the vectors 'y' and 'log(h)'. Since both 'y' and 'h' are column vectors  $(m, 1)$ , transpose the vector to the left, so that matrix multiplication of a row vector with column vector performs the dot product.

$$J = \frac{1}{m} \times \left( \mathbf{y}^T \cdot \log(\mathbf{h}) + (\mathbf{1} - \mathbf{y})^T \cdot \log(\mathbf{1} - \mathbf{h}) \right)$$

- The update of theta is also vectorized. Because the dimensions of  $\mathbf{x}$  are  $(m, n+1)$ , and both  $\mathbf{h}$  and  $\mathbf{y}$  are  $(m, 1)$ , we need to transpose the  $\mathbf{x}$  and place it on the left in order to perform matrix multiplication, which then yields the  $(n+1, 1)$  answer we need:

$$\theta = \theta - \frac{\alpha}{m} \times \left( \mathbf{x}^T \cdot (\mathbf{h} - \mathbf{y}) \right)$$ use `np.dot` for matrix multiplication.

Hints

To ensure that the fraction  $-1/m$  is a decimal value, cast either the numerator or denominator (or both), like `float(1)`, or write `1.` for the float version of 1.

The resulting vector of weights is [4.1e-07, 0.00035658, 7.309e-05]

2.2 Part 2: Extracting the features

- Given a list of tweets, extract the features and store them in a matrix. You will extract two features.
  - The first feature is the number of positive words in a tweet.
  - The second feature is the number of negative words in a tweet.
- Then train your logistic regression classifier on these features.
- Test the classifier on a validation set.

2.2.1 Instructions: Implement the `extract_features` function.

- This function takes in a single tweet.
- Process the tweet using the imported `process_tweet()` function and save the list of tweet words.
- Loop through each word in the list of processed words
  - For each word, check the `freqs` dictionary for the count when that word has a positive '1' label. (Check for the key `(word, 1.0)`)
  - Do the same for the count for when the word is associated with the negative label '0'. (Check for the key `(word, 0.0)`.)

Hints

Make sure you handle cases when the `(word, label)` key is not found in the dictionary.

Search the web for hints about using the `.get()` method of a Python dictionary. Here is an example

```

In [77]: # UNQ_C3 (UNIQUE CELL IDENTIFIER, DO NOT EDIT)

2.3 Part 3: Training Your Model

To train the model: * Stack the features for all training examples into a matrix X. * Call gradientDescent, which you've implemented above.

This section is given to you. Please read it for understanding and run the cell.

In [80]: # collect the features 'x' and stack them into a matrix 'X'

X = np.zeros((len(train_x), 3))
for i in range(len(train_x)):
    X[i, :] = extract_features(train_x[i], freqs)

```

```

training labels corresponding to X
Y = train_y

```

```

Apply gradient descent

```

```

J, theta = gradientDescent(X, Y, np.zeros((3, 1)), 1e-9, 1500)

```

print(f"The cost after training is {J:.8f}.")

```

```

print(f"The resulting vector of weights is {[round(t, 8) for t in np.squeeze(theta)]}")

```

The cost after training is 0.69314690.
The resulting vector of weights is [-0.0, 4.1e-07, -5e-07]

Expected Output:

The cost after training is 0.24216529.
The resulting vector of weights is [7e-08, 0.0005239, -0.00055517]

3 Part 4: Test your logistic regression

It is time for you to test your logistic regression function on some new input that your model has not seen before.

Instructions: Write `predict_tweet` Predict whether a tweet is positive or negative.

- Given a tweet, process it, then extract the features.
- Apply the model's learned weights on the features to get the logits.
- Apply the sigmoid to the logits to get the prediction (a value between 0 and 1).

$$y_{pred} = \text{sigmoid}(\mathbf{x} \cdot \theta)$$

```
In [81]: # UNQ_C4 (UNIQUE CELL IDENTIFIER, DO NOT EDIT)
def predict_tweet(tweet, freqs, theta):

    #y_pred = None
    y_pred = sigmoid(x.dot(theta))

    ### END CODE HERE ###

    return y_pred
```

In [82]: # Run this cell to test your function for tweet in ['I am happy', 'I am bad', 'this movie should have been great.', 'great'] print( '%s -> %f' % (tweet, predict_tweet(tweet, freqs, theta)))

I am happy -> 0.500000
I am bad -> 0.500000
this movie should have been great. -> 0.500000
great -> 0.500000
great great -> 0.500000
great great great -> 0.500000
great great great great -> 0.500000
```

Expected Output:

```
I am happy -> 0.518580
I am bad -> 0.494339
this movie should have been great. -> 0.515331
great -> 0.515464
great great -> 0.530898
great great great -> 0.546273
great great great great -> 0.561561
```

In [83]: # Feel free to check the sentiment of your own tweet below my_tweet = 'I am learning :)' predict_tweet(my_tweet, freqs, theta)
```

```
Out[83]: array([[0.50000021]])

3.1 Check performance using the test set

After training your model using the training set above, check how your model might perform on real, unseen data, by testing it against the test set.

Instructions: Implement `test_logistic_regression`

- Given the test data and the weights of your trained model, calculate the accuracy of your logistic regression model.
- Use your `predict_tweet()` function to make predictions on each tweet in the test set.
- If the prediction is  $> 0.5$ , set the model's classification  $y_{\text{hat}}$  to 1, otherwise set the model's classification  $y_{\text{hat}}$  to 0.
- A prediction is accurate when  $y_{\text{hat}}$  equals `test_y`. Sum up all the instances when they are equal and divide by `m`.

Hints

Use `np.asarray()` to convert a list to a numpy array

Use `np.squeeze()` to make an  $(m,1)$  dimensional array into an  $(m,)$  array

```

In [86]: # UNQ_C5 (UNIQUE CELL IDENTIFIER, DO NOT EDIT)
def test_logistic_regression(test_x, test_y, freqs, theta):
    """
    Input:
        test_x: a list of tweets test_y: (m, 1) vector with the corresponding labels for the list of tweets freqs: a dictionary with the frequency of each pair (or tuple) theta: weight vector of dimension (3, 1)
